

The Committee's appeal was accompanied by a circular by the relatives of the political prisoners, who held the Jordanian government responsible for whatever might happen to the prisoners as a result of the hunger strike, especially as 15 of them were suffering from long-term, dangerous illnesses.

Preliminary results

As a result of the political prisoners' struggle, their 13-day hunger strike, and the broad solidarity campaign, the Jordanian government was forced to relent. On March 23rd, promises and guarantees were made by the officials concerned and submitted to the prisoners through members of the parliament, who had intervened on their behalf. In accordance with these promises, the Palestinian prisoners issued a statement, declaring the end of the strike (printed below). This is a great achievement, yet continued vigilance and struggle is required to insure fulfillment of the pledges given.
