

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I express my sincerest gratitude:

To my advisor, Zachary Lockman, who first turned my gaze toward Hebron and who has wholeheartedly supported and encouraged this research project as it weathered trials and tribulations unforeseen; who generously shares his insight and wisdom; and who has helped me to think in more profound ways about my research findings.

To my committee members (in alphabetical order), Khaled Fahmy, Leslie Peirce, Amy Singer, and Salim Tamari. Whether in classes, conversations, or before and after presentations, over coffees, meals, or email, I have benefitted continuously over the years from their sagaciousness. I am likewise grateful for their enthusiastic interest in and support of my research, and for their questions, suggestions, comments, challenges, and critiques.

To the institutions that made my research possible: Fulbright-Hays, the Palestinian-American Research Center (PARC), the American Center of Oriental Research in Amman (ACOR), the American Research Institute in Turkey (ARIT), the Council of American Overseas Research Centers (CAORC), and the New York University Department of Middle East and Islamic Studies.
