

To scholars who have generously shared with me their knowledge and their research (particularly when I could not otherwise obtain it), and who encouraged me in my research interests and helped me further them: Martha Mundy, Zouhair Ghazzal, Iris Agmon, Kimberly Katz, Michael Provence, Zvi Ben-Dor Benite, Michael Gilsean, Marion Katz, Etem and Sibel Erol, John Fousek, Meltem Toksöz, Mahmoud Taleb al-Nammoura, Khalid 'Abd al-Karim al-Manasreh, Cengiz Tomar, Zeidan A. Kafafi, Farouk Yaghmour, Avner Wishnitzer, Nora Barakat, and Ruth Kark.

To the many individuals I am deeply indebted: Penny Mitchell, Ghada al-Madbouh and everyone at PARC, without whose backing and aid my research in Hebron literally would not have been possible. To Barbara Porter and Chris Tuttle at ACOR, whose support and gracious kindness opened (and sometimes re-opened) many doors for me in Amman. To Helena Vilinski at the Israeli State Archives and AbduAllah Damdoum and Afnan Alawneh at the Archive and Microfilm division of the University of Jordan library, whose extraordinary helpfulness greatly facilitated my research and whose personableness lights up their archives . To Peter Magierski, Guy Burak, the library staff at NYU, the library staff at İSAM, the library staff at the National Library of Israel, the library staff at the University of Jordan, Eli and Khaled Awwad, the library staff at Hebron University, and the library staff at the Hebron municipal library, I am deeply indebted.

To ACOR, PARC, The Kenyon Institute of the Council for British Research in the Levant (and here I must gratefully mention Mandy Turner), Tel Aviv University, and the Watson
