

Institute at Brown University (with special gratitude to Beshara Doumani): where I have been able to present findings from various stages of my research project; I am thankful and wiser for the experiences.

To Zyad Rjoub, who helped me learn how to decipher nineteenth-century Arabic script. To Ibrahim Halil Kalkan, who generously, thoughtfully, and patiently always answers my inquiries about Ottoman. To Alex Winder, who kindly took time to search out for me needed archival material I realized too late that I had forgotten. To Leena Dallasheh, for many conversations about Palestinian history and other pressing matters. To Micaela Sinibaldi and Eman Morsi, for academic and non-academic support and true friendship. To Anas Mustafa Mahmoud al-Natsheh, who did all he could. To my parents, for whom all words are inadequate and all thanks insufficient. To Noreen, Audrey, Don, Brian, Olivia, and Wyatt, who helped me get through this successfully in more ways than they know, perhaps. To Joseph Jones, who gave me immeasurable strength during the last push. And to all those I have neglected to mention by name, for my debts of gratitude are sizeable; thank you.
