

following property-tenure reforms. The importance of the historical tapu certificate today is anachronistic. It developed in the Mandate period and has come to have even greater importance under Israeli rule. In the post-Tanzimat years of the nineteenth century, tax records, oral testimony, and sharia-court documents continued to be sufficient to prove property tenure. The transparence of the tapu is prétendue.