

sociology. In the Bibliography, I provided a list of the farmers, landlords, and public officials who generously gave me of their time, but I want to thank especially Hussein Salameh of Zbeidat, and Rashid Aranki, formerly of the Land Survey Department in the Government of Palestine.

Erica Lander and Lisa Blum kindly provided translations from the Hebrew; Anne Scott and Vera Tamari helped me with the maps and village close-ups. I am also gratefully indebted to the following institutions for providing financial help during the writing of the thesis: The Population Council, Cairo; The Harvard Institute of International Development, Cambridge; and, above all, Birzeit University. I am particularly thankful to Drs. Baramki, Barghouti, and Giacaman for granting me a reduced teaching load during the final phase of writing. Emily Makhoul and Jean Ashton typed the final draft with grace and precision.

Finally, I will always remember with fondness the hospitality and generosity extended to me during my extended stays in rainy Manchester by Liz Taylor, Issam 'Awni, Josy and Kenneth Brown and their families. May their buyut prosper.

This thesis is lovingly dedicated to my mother, who tolerated my continued invasion of her work space, and to the memory of my father.
